Red wolves

Do you know about red wolves? Red wolves are only found in the United States and live in forests, swamps and large open areas of grassland

What do they eat?

Amazingly, red wolves like to eat white-tailed deers, raccoons and smaller mammals like rabbits, rodents and nutria. Red wolves are top predators, also known as apex predators and have no known predators except humans.

The Asian unicorns

Have you ever heard of a saola? No? Well if you like unicorns you will like them. Saolas have striking white markings on the face and large glands on the muzzle. Interestingly, saolas are only found in the Annamite Mountains of Laos and Vietnam.

What do they eat?

Saolas are herbivores meaning they only eat plants. As you observe saolas, you can see that they enjoy trees, grass, nuts and berries. Although tigers pose a threat to saolas, their greatest predators are humans. Humans hunt for their horns. Saolas are now at a risk of extinction.
